In pre-Buddhist India, the term arhat, denoting a saintly person in general, was closely associated with miraculous power and asceticism. The Buddhists drew a sharp distinction between their arhat and Indian holy men in general, in Buddhism these miraculous powers were no longer central to arhat identity or to his mission.

Bram Stoker's Dracula was the book that first took a bunch of campfire stories and cultural myths and constructed the modern incarnation of the vampire. It's about a guy from Transylvania (which we're betting you probably couldn't place on a map) who decides he wants to leave his dark, lonely castle at the edge of some obscure European village and enjoy the comforts of Western society.

I got very distracted by the list of econ & philosophy books I put together with the help of #econtwitter, so haven't read much new stuff lately. The exception has been Shadows of Doubt: Stereotypes, Crime & the Pursuit of Justice by Brendan O'Flaherty & Rajiv Sethi, a fantastic and sobering book. The theme is the central role stereotyping plays in the criminal justice system.
