

The Future Of Our Past

The Future Of Our Past

Welcome to the Lakes380 project! During this five-year project, we will characterise the health of New Zealand lakes by analysing sediment cores from 380 locations nationwide. Lake sediments are natural archives that can provide information on current and historical aquatic communities, water quality and changes in the landscape. Using a range of techniques, we will explore...

The Kavli Lecture is given by Professor Ed Hawkins. The long hot, dry summer of 2018 was a reminder that our society is vulnerable to unusual weather, through risks to human health, aging infrastructure, transport disruption and lower crop production. Such heatwaves are now hotter than in the past ...

While healing is a large part of QHHT, exploring past life regression is one of the most unique aspects of this technique. By using a form of focused awareness, the participant is guided to focus on their breathing, visualize some beautiful calming imagery, and slowly fall into a light, trance-like state.
