In Reuel Parker's book on cold-molded building he encourages building a wooden mast to accompany your wooden boat. He casts aspersions on the longevity of aluminum masts while stating that a well-built and well-maintained wooden mast can last for generations. Can anyone comment on this? I kind of like the idea of a wooden mast/boom but have a few questions.

A mooring mast, or mooring tower, is a structure designed to allow for the docking of an airship outside of an airship hangar or similar structure. More specifically, a mooring mast is a mast or tower that contains a fitting on its top that allows for the bow of the airship to attach its mooring line to the structure. When it is not necessary or convenient to put an airship into its hangar (or ...

The Diamond City, Kimberley, switched on electric streetlights in 1882 making it the first city in Africa to be illuminated in this manner. At this time, London still relied on gas lamps for street lighting. Between 1884 and 1890 the use of electric motors, lights in mines, private lighting and an electric tram evolved. The first central power station was established in 1891.
